The House procedurally really only has two options at this point: choose to concur in the Senate amendment, or ask the Senate to recede from its position, which is the first step to a conference committee.

(You can't amend the Senate amendment to the House amendment, because that's a third-degree amendment which isn't allowed by rules. It would take a 2/3s vote to suspend that rule, which I would presume is doubtful to get.)

I can't speculate on when the House will take up the Senate message at this point. We had planned morning & afternoon floor sessions all week to get bills moving ahead of Crossover Day. It could be during either session.
